MICHIGAN SOLDIERS IN THE CIVIL WAR

Frederick D Williams

Professor Frederick Williams of Michigan State University was one of the three members of the centennial commission's publications committee. It is fortunate for Michigan that he was. Besides directing the commission's publications efforts, Professor Williams authored Michigan Soldiers in the Civil War. His manuscript first appeared in Michigan History Magazine before being published as a book. This fourth edition has been expanded to including a new design, more photographs and an updated reading list.

Step into your own personal CD-ROM library. Click on a book from the bookshelf, and up comes the text. Click on pictures to view photographs that relate to the text. Next, click on the VCR to see the black-and-white, Academy-Award-winning documentary film, "The True Story of the Civil War." The film consists of photos taken by Matthew Brady, Alexander Gardner, Henstis Cook, George Cook, Timothy O'Sullivan, and many others and captures the saga of the Civil War. The original "wet plate" photographs were actually made more than one hundred years ago on the field of battle. And you are there, thanks to The Civil War. Matthew Brady was known worldwide by many Presidents, diplomats, socialites, and, for the purposes of this presentation, by the soldiers in the field of battle. Capturing on film the hardship and the moment of the Civil War, he accompanied General Grant through Virginia. He photographed battles from Bull Run to Gettysburg, Fredericksburg, Antietam, Cold Harbor, and the Petersburg campaign. Also included are thousands of questions and answers. W = Windows. IBM Format only.
